

New Art in the Neighborhood Endless Return

New Art in the Neighborhood: Endless Return, installation view, Contemporary Art Museum St. Louis, May 11–August 19, 2018.

This spring NAN explored the ways in which contemporary artists use sound as a material through experimental sound production and recording techniques. Record loops, graphic scores, field recordings, motion picture soundtracks, and popular and improvised music all prompted discussions of sound's inherent qualities and the limitations of perception. The vinyl record became the vehicle for the NAN studio projects as both an archive and as a material expression of sound. Pre-existent album cover art, text, and design became a canvas upon which the artists chose to respond or to re-create. The record itself became a metaphor for the cyclical nature of space and time, with the exhibition title inspired by the philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche's idea of "eternal recurrence."
