FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Museum-wide exhibition Like Water considers landscape simultaneously as a material, physical condition and an interior emotional state, presenting an international and multigenerational group of artists. Exhibition opens March 7

Candice Lin, La Charada China, 2018.

February 10, 2025 (St. Louis, MO)—The Contemporary Art Museum St. Louis (CAM) will present Like Water, a museum-wide exhibition featuring an international and multigenerational group of artists. The exhibition considers landscape simultaneously as a material, physical condition and an interior emotional state. Works in Like Water address water in multiple ways—from its life-giving and destructive powers, to the Mississippi River and its numerous tributaries, fonts (of inspiration), floods (of emotion), climate change, leakiness, and the Middle Passage, among other subjects. Participating artists include Jamal Cyrus, Simone Fattal, Dionne Lee, Candice Lin, Beatriz Santiago Muñoz, and Vivian Suter. Like Water will be on view at CAM from March 7–August 10, 2025.

Like Water will fill the museum with sculpture, video, ceramics, drawing, textiles, collages, and paintings. Each artist approaches the subject of water and fluidity in deeply individual ways that are made evident through substantive presentations of their work. For example, artworks by Cyrus, Lin, and Santiago Muñoz expose lesser-known histories of the Middle

Passage and US colonial relationships with Puerto Rico and the Caribbean. In the hands of Suter, Lee, and Fattal respectively, fluidity is physically evident via liquid acrylic paint and cascading installations of unstretched canvases; in video and collages that focus viewers' attention on seen and unseen bodies of water; and in the plasticity of clay before the process of firing in a kiln.

The artists in Like Water share stories and ideas that have been shaped by and through this life-sustaining element. Taken together, their works encourage viewers to reflect on water's emotional and poetic resonances, and the changing cultural, ecological, and sociopolitical ecosystems in which we circulate.

About the artists featured in Like Water:

Jamal Cyrus' (b.1973) multidisciplinary practice draws on the languages of collage and assemblage to explore the evolution of African American identity in relation to Black political movements and African diasporic experience. Cyrus' aesthetic practice transforms mundane materials into objects with rich, densely packed networks of meaning and purpose. His Blue Alluvial Glue series focuses on denim, the workwear material whose dependence on indigo dyeing implicates it in US colonial trade, the Middle Passage, and Antebellum southern cotton production. His works also reference alluvial soil—deposited by flooding rivers—that enriches riparian land, and the musical genre of the Blues. CAM's presentation will include textile works as well as reimagined and repurposed musical instruments that are, in the artist's words, "ritual objects for reconnecting African and African American cultures."

As a part of the exhibition's public programs, CAM is commissioning a performance titled Horn Beam Sacrament by Jamal Cyrus. In collaboration with St. Louis-based poet K. Curtis Lyle and Houston-based artist and musician Corey De'Juan Sherrard, Jr., Cyrus will engage his sculptural works with sound and action. The performance will take place on Saturday, March 8, from 11:00 am–12:00 pm.

Simone Fattal's (b.1942) ceramic sculptures appear simultaneously ancient and wholly modern. A small group of Fattal's earliest ceramic sculptures—never before publicly exhibited until Like Water—were inspired by a sculpture known as the Amorite Spring Goddess, which Fattal encountered decades ago in the collection of the Aleppo Museum in Syria. These homages appear alongside additional ceramic and cast bronze figures that suggest sentries and venerable deities, as well as architectural and natural phenomena. Fattal's presentation will chart a sinuous course through the museum, originating in the main galleries and culminating in CAM's courtyard.

Candice Lin's (b.1979) practice—spanning ceramics, built environments, assemblage and drawing—critically exposes histories of colonization, extraction, consumption, and exploitation. Building what she refers to as "tactile theaters," Lin creates spaces in which buried, overlooked narratives are unearthed and teased. Referencing histories of Chinese laborers in the Caribbean, Lin's La Charada China occupies a room with an earthen floor, mylar walls, grow lights, and a rudimentary irrigation system with a raised platform in the center. The platform's mixture of red clay and cement is formed into a human silhouette where seeds are planted with the intention to cultivate growth. For the presentation at CAM,

Lin has updated this work to include an audio component that offers a narrative of shifting and fluid identity. Celebrating decay, leaks, sputtering, and the disintegration of materials, Lin's work offers an analogue for the dissolution of unwelcome, oppressive systems.

Dionne Lee (b.1988) creates photographs, collages, and videos that explore power, survival, and personal history in relation to the American landscape. She delves into themes of autonomy, the presence of ancestral trauma and resilience, and the history and energies of particular places. From Lee's perspective, water is a wilderness that holds dueling forces of safety and danger, and her meditative videos and collaged photographic prints mine the visible and invisible undercurrents of American cultural history.

Beatriz Santiago Muñoz (b.1972) is an artist whose approach to making films and videos resembles the careful approach of an ethnographer. Her moving images often cast non-actors as protagonists, and amplify and expand cultural histories and local mythologies. Santiago Muñoz refers to her approach as the "sensory unconscious" and it allows her and her subjects to explore environmental experiences and realities that connect people with particular sites. At CAM, a three-channel video installation explores the Classical Greek myth of Philoctetes, a legendary hero and expert archer who fought for Sparta in the Trojan War. Drawn to this myth's shoreline setting and "the daydreams isolated places incite," Santiago Muñoz's work questions Puerto Rico's "left-behind" colonial relationship with the US, and the island's recent challenges due to hurricanes and rising sea levels.

Vivian Suter (b.1949) lives and works in Panajachel, Guatemala, painting in makeshift studios throughout a dense forest. Working outdoors, her paintings are subject to natural forces, and Suter welcomes the weathering of her canvases. Her unique presentations often immerse viewers in cascades of un-stretched canvases suspended from ceilings and walls. Suter's colorful, gestural paintings evoke fluidity both in their application of liquid acrylic paint, and as they slide between abstraction and representation. At once refined and riotous, the installation of 85 paintings suspended from the ceiling across the museum's expansive galleries will significantly alter the experience of CAM's architecture, providing captivating spaces for contemplation and discovery.

Related Interpretive Exhibition

Taking inspiration from themes in Like Water, CAM will also present a related interpretive exhibition and symposium on view at the same time. Make the River Present will provide creative engagement with the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. Although St. Louis is physically bordered by these rivers—the two longest in the US—their presence is often obscured by industrialization, urban planning, and Indigenous erasure. Through an interactive space in CAM's Education Galleries, visitors will be invited to strengthen connections to these mighty rivers through works of art, resources, and activities that highlight present-day and ancestral stewardship of the river and its environments, especially focusing on Native and African American perspectives.

This interactive exhibition provides a physical space to explore the contributions of artists and cultural stewards whose work respects and engages rivers. Works by Black Water Heritage Trail, Allena Brazier, Dail Chambers, Galen Gritts (Cherokee), Native Women's Care Circle, Monique Verdin (Houma), and selected writings by other authors and contributors are on view.

As a complement to the exhibition, a series of curated gatherings will uplift ways artists and cultural stewards can align our relationship to the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers as well as reinforce communal relations and interdependence of human beings and nature. These events are opportunities to reorient our positioning as contemporary, urban dwellers to one that is part of a longer historical arc shaped by the presence of the river.

Make the River Present is organized for the Contemporary Art Museum St. Louis by Michelle Dezember, CAM's Director of Learning & Engagement and Allena Brazier, independent curator. The exhibition and symposium are presented in partnership with the Missouri Humanities and with support from the Missouri Humanities Trust Fund.

CAM will host a press preview on March 7, 2025. For press inquiries, including access to the preview or interview opportunities with the artists or curator, contact Alexia Majors at amajors@camstl.org

About the Contemporary Art Museum St. Louis

The Contemporary Art Museum St. Louis creates meaningful engagement with the most relevant and innovative art being made today. Founded by civic and cultural leaders in 1980, the Museum transformed from a small gallery into an internationally recognized arts institution, now permanently housed in a flexible, open, and inviting building designed by renowned American architect Brad Cloepfil. CAM's distinct architecture reflects the organization's values and supports a dynamic range of exhibitions, public programs, educational initiatives, and community collaborations. The only museum in the region solely dedicated to contemporary art, CAM is one of the preeminent non-collecting institutions of its kind in the United States. We are a site for discovery, a welcoming space, free and open to all. For more information, visit camstl.org.
